First, they were having issues--safety or somewhat, getting into car shootings. They were borderline unless. Then, El Camino picked them up. They wouldn't be valid, with school credits. They didn't govern them enough. I don't know what they can do to motivate others. Kids have no job, no ambitions. Not everyone can work for McDonald's.

I heard El Camino was getting shut down. I've seen that they're still in business. My friends that still go there, they haven't complained about the certifications. I assessed that it has improved and the administration has gotten better. They don't have the same opportunities at El Camino. You have to go to a whole other facility.
